[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

(From the Scotsman)

PROBABLY few people in Edinburgh are aware that there is living amongst them a class of persons who will not eat a single morsel of meat killed by any other than a Jew. Each of these "coashars" is more than cook any portion of the carcass, which are not so liberally, under the operation of the Cattle Disease Act, sent into the city from the country. All animal food, of whatever kind, partaken of by them must be prepared by a Jew. The priest, who is the spiritual priest alone, and only his warrant accepted as guarantee for its soundness. Twice a week, in Edinburgh Slaughter-houses—on Monday and Wednesday—the Jewish priest kills, as did Aaron of old, the beasts of the city. He is assisted by eighteen or twenty Jewish families in Edinburgh of whom he is spiritual ruler.

These animals are not slaughtered in the ordinary way—i.e., they are not felled by a blow from the point of a knife, but the hind legs are shackled to a ring on the neck to a ring in the side of the wall, the fore legs are shackled to a ring on the neck, and the hind legs are shackled to a ring on the side of the wall. The hind legs are then tied firmly together by a rope, which is long enough to pass from the hind legs round the shackles, and the animal is then killed by a blow from the neck with strength sufficient to draw the fore legs off together, when the animal of course tumbles. The rope round the neck is then removed, the beast lying on its back, and the priest, who is assisted by a Jew, commences his skinning operation. As the animal is in his character of butcher on Wednesday, he is certainly as unlike the popular ideal of a spiritual adviser as could possibly be imagined. Dressed in a long black coat, with a high collar, and a long coat of greasy and glazed with age and dirt as ever the robes of Abraham wore, so tattered and so old that it would have taken as many patches as Joseph's coat had colours to have made him as conspicuous as the rainbow. He enters the booth, smoking a cutty pipe. When the bullock had been thrown down in the manner described, he brought out a long-bladed iron-handled knife, in size something like that with which a cooper splits staves, and which is from 18 to 20 inches broad, thick on the back, but with an edge sharp as a razor. No Gentile priests are permitted to poll the animal, having always, about it, him, the Jew, who is in a very dexterous manner, a knowledge of this, as well as of butchering, forming a necessary part of the priestly education. Having satisfied himself by drawing the knife along the side of the animal, he then turns the edge that the knife is sharp enough, the priest draws the head of the beast about to be killed so bent back as to force its throat prominently forward, when, with one cut, he lays it open from ear to ear. The death of the animal is instantaneous. The Jew then proceeds to the best being quite dead, the ordinary butcher proceeded to skin it in the usual manner. An incision is made under the breast, into which the priest thrusts his hand to examine the internal organs. If the lungs should be slightly diseased, the animal is not killed; the beast is condemned, and another must be slaughtered; as indeed there must also be if the first cut in the throat is not sufficient to cause death. The Jew, who is now a young man, as many as fifteen years of age, had the honor of the slaughter, and he would not cut one to satisfy himself. Meat condemned is designated "trif," and that passing is called "cohash." Only the fore quarters of the animal are eaten by the Jews, the rest being given to the dogs. The hind quarters do not find much use for food. When ever there is a vein in the flesh, it must be carefully cut out, or, as it is technically termed, "purged" by the priest, in accordance with the injunction of the law, "Thou shalt not eat the blood." "It shall be a perpetual statute for your generations throughout all your dwellings that ye eat neither fat nor blood;" and in obedience to the law, the Jews refuse to touch the kidneys or the rest upon which the law forbids the use of the fat and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys it shall be taken away. The only fat made use of is the fat of the head, which is used for the purpose of circumcised dispose of to the tallow chandler.

When the beast has been dressed, and the fore quarters cut off by the twelfth rib, the priest marks the meat with a seal, upon which are engraved certain Hebrew characters, and the meat is then taken to the various places. These are guarantees to the faithful, when they go to the butcher, that the meat is "cohash." When it reaches the butcher, the meat is marked by him in pieces to suit his Jewish customers, and the priest having received the money, he then takes the names given to the various pieces of meat. The Jews differ from those commonly in use. Thus the thick end of the shoulder they designate "bolla," the middle of the shoulder "time rib," the coarse end of the roast, "chuck;" and the two sides are designated "double top rib," according to the cut. Meat, even when passed by the priest, cannot be "cohash," clean, for more than three days after a beast has been killed, and it is then taken to the water, and the Jews are immersed in water. Before cooking, the Jew again "cohash" the meat at their own homes, by dipping it in a basin of clean water. They then place upon an salet turned upside down, and sprinkle with salt, and then turn it over, and sprinkle with salt out all the blood, which runs down the sides of the inverted dish. After being once more steeped in water, it is ready for the fire.

A CELEBRATED APPLE-TREE.—A gentleman just from Appleton Court has written me the following. It is nothing like of the apple-tree at which General Lee surrendered but a red hole in the ground, and is feared that unless the hole is fenced in that also will be removed by curiosity-seekers. "It is a salubrious tree, and has been growing for centuries. It was to be the largest tree in the world, being at least forty times the bulk of the celebrated California oak which was about the size of the citadel of Harpersburg. The tree is a large apple, and has already been distributed over the United States. It is a tree of walking-canes, fishing-poles, umbrella handles, policemen's clubs, workboxes, sewing-machines, writing-desks, vest buttons, corsets, charms, lead pencils, pen-knives, and all the other articles of the world, and in these heroic relics is estimated at about twenty-eight millions. But for the fact that General Lee used it for the magic of potent verse. The best plan is, when the tree is cut down, to cut it down, and to determine not to go to sleep at all, but to draw up the blinds, and look out, if it be a clear night, at the star, endeavouring to divine whether they and you will be the same. This is a very good exercise. This plan exercises gradually subdues if anything can, the perturbations of the mind, and brings on, as if against our will, the tranquillity we covet. Chambers's Journal.

The Chamberlaine and party have been lately exhibiting in Glasgow. His pedigree has been traced, and it has been found that he has descended from a Scotch family—as all great men do. The family of Egyptian dancers will shortly be exhibited upon the French stage. A company of French 1 team of working bullocks, dray and yokes complete, also light horse cart and spring racing cart.

The improvements, viz.:—head station cottage of three rooms with store, barnroom, room, cellar, store, kitchen, and man's house, well equipped of accommodating 10 shearers, with lever press, gins, and shearer's hut, are all in good working order. There are twenty-one station miles with sheep yards to each, and in most instances a set of double yards for lambing.

The station is well supplied with stores, and the working plant is equal, if not superior to that on any other station in the same district.

The stock are first-class and in prime condition, and particular attention is called to the fact that the majority of the sheep are breeding ewes, none being too old for that purpose, all having been carefully culled every season. Persons intending to purchase are invited to inspect the station stock.

The produce of the station has been conveyed from the homestead to Melbourne at the very moderate rate of 210 per ton, and rations taken to the station at the same rate. Steamers ply regularly past the door, during all seasons, when the river is navigable.

The above property is placed in the market in consequence of the absolute necessity for winding up the estate

MESSERS. MACKNIGHT and IRVINE have placed in the hands of Messrs. Cuningham and Macleod, for sale by public auction, at their Store in Melbourne, on August next,
About 100 rams 1 and 4 tooth, having the first draft from the thoroughbred Camden flock, reared at Dunmore.
These sheep are descended, without the admixture of any other blood, from the original pure Spanish merinos, imported by Captain Macarthur, upwards of sixty years ago.

Previous to the arrival of Captain Macarthur's wool in England, the fine wool had ever been combed there, but the length of some of the best was only 10 in. In consequence of the firmness of the fibre, created an entirely new branch of trade, and the unprecedented price of 10s. per lb. was realised for some kinds of it.

This flock is the fountain head of the stream of blood, which has raised the flocks of Victoria to their present pre-eminence.

It is the purest blood alone that the clips, which brought the highest price as the March sales, are indebted for their coming quality.

By holding the sale in Melbourne, an opportunity will be afforded the breeders in all the colonies to obtain a strain of this blood, which has been proved by the most able authorities to be the best in the world.

The sale will be bona fide, without reserve.
